

Kristin Ven Bruusgaard is a Stanton Nuclear Security Predoctoral Fellow at the Center for International Security and Cooperation (CISAC), Stanford University, and a doctoral candidate at King's College London. Her research focuses on Russian nuclear strategy and deterrence policy in the post-Cold War era. Kristin is currently on leave from the Norwegian Institute for Defence Studies (IFS). She has previously been a senior security policy analyst in the Norwegian Armed Forces, a junior researcher at the Norwegian Defence Research Establishment (FFI), and an intern at the Congressional Research Service (CRS) in Washington, D.C., and at NATO HQ. She holds an MA in Security Studies from Georgetown University, and a BA from Warwick University. Her work has been published in Survival, Security Dialogue, U.S. Army War College Quarterly Parameters, War on the Rocks and in the Texas National Security Review.